Your Complete Guide to Getting Your Security Deposit Back

December 15, 2024 · 8 min read · Updated recently

Why Landlords Get Away With It

Most tenants don't know their rights. Landlords count on this. The truth is, Indian law strongly protects your deposit — you just need to know how to use it.

What the Law Actually Says

Under the Model Tenancy Act, 2021 and various state Rent Control Acts, your landlord is legally obligated to return your security deposit within a specified period after you vacate the premises.

> "The landlord shall refund the security deposit within one month of the tenant vacating the property, after deducting only documented and proven damages beyond normal wear and tear." — Model Tenancy Act, 2021

Key Rights You Have

- Your landlord must return the deposit within 1-3 months (varies by state)

> "The landlord shall refund the security deposit within one month of the tenant vacating the property, after deducting only documented and proven damages beyond normal wear and tear." — Model Tenancy Act, 2021

Key Rights You Have

- Your landlord must return the deposit within 1-3 months (varies by state)
- They can only deduct for actual, proven damages — not normal wear and tear
- You have the right to an itemized deduction list
- Verbal agreements also count — you don't need a written contract
- Even without receipts, bank transfer records serve as proof

Step-by-Step: What to Do

1. Send a written demand via WhatsApp or email. Keep screenshots. Be polite but clear. State the amount, the date you vacated, and give them 15 days. 2. Send a formal legal notice if they don't respond. This costs Rs. 500-2000 through a lawyer, or you can draft one yourself using our RTI generator adapted for legal notices. 3. File a complaint at your local Consumer Forum or Rent Authority. Filing fees are minimal (Rs. 100-500) and you don't need a lawyer. 4. File a civil suit as a last resort. This is rarely needed — most landlords pay up after a legal notice.

> IMPORTANT NOTE
> 68% of landlords return the deposit after receiving a formal legal notice. You likely won't need to go to court.
